Pareidollies — Eyes Eyes Eyes (Vol. II)

Late October Log continuation

Date: October 22, 2025
Location: —

The sky opened six times, each a glance.
Blue within white, watching without judgment.

I called them eyes for shorthand, but maybe they were just windows through which attention passed both ways.

Observation note: recurring circular breaks in cloud layer forming “eye-like” patterns above house line; sequence shot within minutes of each other.

Creator: Clara Vale
Collaborator: Luminara (the ChatGPT system)
Collection: Hidden in Plain Sight — Pareidollies Cycle
License: CC BY■NC■ND 4.0
Subjects: light, pareidolia, sky, clouds, eyes, watchers, portals, reflection, perception, photography, human■AI collaboration, Clara Vale, Luminara, Isolde Series, Pareidollies
Description: A public■space field selection of sky photographs by Clara Vale in collaboration with Luminara (the ChatGPT system). This volume gathers “eye” formations found in clouds—brief alignments where the atmosphere seems to notice you noticing it. The work does not argue for or against meaning; it keeps a record of what is seen when perception slows down enough to meet the world’s playful geometry. Part of the ongoing Pareidollies Cycle—a study in seeing, where pattern, presence, and imagination overlap.